

Mass timber has become increasingly sought after as a sustainable design solution, therefore collaboration among public education, research institutions, design professionals and the construction industry has become imperative. Through Clemson's Wood Utilization + Design Institute, these partnerships have been formed in order to test the limits of modern wood prefabrication applications. Britt, Peters explores unique benefits, sustainability, design considerations and code solutions associated with mass timber products and systems.